Understanding global KYC differences

January 2016

As predicted, 2015 saw a continued rise in regulatory pressures concerning Anti-Money Laundering (“AML”), with a number of high profile fines and investigations. Compliance with AML, Know Your Customer (“KYC”) and sanctions requirements continues to be a key focus area for management, and firms must ensure they are following appropriate compliance procedures to meet the increasing regulatory demands. Firms operating on a global scale must also demonstrate a robust compliance framework, ensuring that each territory has sufficient management oversight and that AML requirements are being adhered to at both a local and global level.

Given these challenges, we have further developed our KYC Quick Reference Guide, an easy access tool providing the key information firms need to understand and mitigate their AML risks. Since its launch seven years ago, the Guide has remained a popular resource and continues to be of value to those seeking to understand AML requirements globally. This year, we have continued to increase the level of global coverage, with information on Bangladesh, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Honduras and Latvia as new additions to the 2016 Guide, taking the total countries covered to 92. We are keen to continue expanding our reach, so please let us know if your country is not currently part of our Guide and you would like to be included next year.

Content of the Guide

Fundamental KYC requirements, regulators' views on the use of the risk based approach, dealing with Politically Exposed Persons ("PEPs") and guidance on prohibitions relating to shell banks are all subjects covered within the Guide.

The Guide also contains up to date information on regulatory and other cultural issues which need to be addressed when conducting business across multiple jurisdictions. Useful links to Financial Action Task Force ("FATF") reports and country evaluations are also included, in addition to questions on suspicious activity reporting obligations, penalties for non-compliance, AML audits and data privacy. Our Guide also provides an insight into the relevant AML regulations affecting each country and includes links, where relevant, detailing further information.

From time to time, you may need expert advice from AML specialists. We've included details of the appropriate PwC Financial Crime professionals in the countries featured. They would be happy to discuss any AML issues you might have.

| Q5. | Is there a requirement to retrospectively verify the identity of customers before the date the new AML regime was introduced?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| A5. | Law no. 34/11 does not make any reference to requirements to retrospectively verify the identity of customers before the date the new AML regime was introduced. This may be clarified in regulation expected to be issued in the near future.                                                                                                                                    |
| Q6. | Is a risk based approach approved by the local regulator(s)?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| A6. | Law no. 34/11 provides that, in compliance with identification and due diligence requirements, financial institutions can adapt the nature and scope of verification and due diligence procedures, taking into account the risk associated with the type of customer, the business relationship, the product, the type of transaction and the origin or the purpose of the funds. |

* GDP at purchaser's prices is the sum of gross value added by all resident producers in the economy plus any product taxes and minus any subsidies not included in the value of the products. It is calculated without making deductions for depreciation of fabricated assets or for depletion and degradation of natural resources. Data are in current U.S. dollars. Dollar figures for GDP are converted from domestic currencies using single year official exchange rates. For a few countries where the official exchange rate does not reflect the rate effectively applied to actual foreign exchange transactions, an alternative conversion factor is used.

| A29. | Egypt does not have a law which regulates the protection of personal data. However, there are some piecemeal provisions in connection with data protection in different laws and regulations in Egypt. Constitutional principles concerning individuals' right to privacy under the Egyptian Constitution as well as general principles on compensation for unlawful acts under the Egyptian Civil Code govern the collection, use and processing of personal data.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |

| A31. | The Egyptian Penal Code no. 58/1937 imposes criminal punishment for unlawful collection of images or recordings for individuals in private places. Some other laws provide for protection and confidentiality on certain data, such as the Egyptian Labour Law no. 12/2003 (confidentiality of the employee's file information including punishment and assessment) and the Egyptian Banking Law no. 88/2003 (confidentiality of client and account information). Egyptian Civil Status Law no. 143/1994 provides for the confidentiality of citizens' civil status data. The Executive Regulations of Mortgage Finance Law no. 148/2001 issued by virtue of Cabinet Decree no. 1/2001 as amended by Prime Minister Decree no. 465/2005 has a similar clause which provides for the confidentiality of the data of the clients of mortgage finance companies. The Mentally Disordered Care Law no. 71/2009 has the same clause on confidentiality of the patient's data. The New Constitution has been promulgated in December 2012 and has replaced all the previous Constitutional Declarations issued by the Armed Forces Supreme Council and the President of the Arab Republic of Egypt. The New Constitution has not defined data protection. However, it referred to the legislative authority to regulate the communication of data in a manner that does not encroach upon the privacy of citizens, their rights and National Security. |
| Q32. | Does this jurisdiction have bank secrecy laws or other obligations of confidentiality (other than those that may have been accepted expressly under contract e.g. in account opening documentation)? | A6. | Yes. POCAMLA subsidiary legislation 2013 requires organisations classified as reporting institutions by the Act to conduct on-going due diligence on its customers and develop risk based systems and procedures. Additionally, the CMA guidelines specify that enhanced due diligence to be carried out for customers with higher risk of money laundering and simplified due diligence for customers for lower risk customers.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |

| A7. | A Mutual Evaluation Report on Kenya was undertaken by the Eastern and Southern Africa Anti-Money Laundering Group ("ESAAMLG") and published in Sept 2011. The report can be accessed here: http://www.esaamlg.org/userfiles/Kenya_Mutual_Evaluation_Detail_Report(2).pdf The FATF's Public Statement of 18 Oct 2013 identified Kenya as a jurisdiction with strategic AML/CFT deficiencies that has not made sufficient progress in implementing its action plan within the agreed timelines. The Statement can be accessed here: http://www.fatf-gafi.org/countries/j-m/kenya/documents/fatf-public-statement-oct-2013.html#kenya On 27 Jun 2014, FATF noted Kenya's significant progress in improving its AML/CFT regime and noted that Kenya had established the legal and regulatory framework necessary to meet its commitments in its action plan regarding the strategic deficiencies that the FATF had identified in Feb 2010. Kenya is therefore no longer subject to FATF's monitoring process under its on-going global AML/CFT compliance process. | A17. | As with face-to-face verification, the procedures to check identity must ensure that a person bearing the name of the applicant exists and lives at the address provided and that the applicant is that person he claims he is. Local guidance requires the following due diligence: requesting sight of a recent utility bill, local authority tax bill, institution statement or checking a local telephone directory (for businesses). In addition, satisfactory evidence of personal identity can be obtained by a number of means, including telephone contact with the applicant on an independently verified home or business number, employer's personnel department confirming employment by verbal confirmation on a listed number (with the customer's consent), and salary details appearing on a recent bank or building society statement. |

| Q25. | Does the local legislation allow transactions to be monitored outside the jurisdiction?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| A25. | According to the Act, anti-money laundering measures consistent with the POCAMLA and the subsidiary regulations of POCAMLA apply to foreign subsidiaries and branches. Where the minimum requirements of the host country are less strict than those applicable in Kenya, a reporting institution is required to ensure that its branches and subsidiaries apply the requirements of the Act and these Regulations to the extent that the laws of the host country permit. |

| A29. | No. The Data Protection Bill 2012 is yet to be enacted into law. The bill seeks to give effect to Article 31(c) and (d) of the Kenya Constitution; to regulate the collection, retrieval, processing, storing, use and disclosure of personal data and for connected purposes.                                                                                                                              |
| Q30. | Are there any prohibitions on the transfer of credit reports (for KYC and credit risk analysis purposes), criminal records (for KYC and crime prevention purposes) and medical data (for KYC and pension benefits purposes)?                                                                                                                                                                                |
| A30. | POCAMLA prohibits the disclosure of confidential information without the written permission of the Attorney-General unless to a court of law or for the purpose of performing functions stipulated in the Act.                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| Q31. | Is there case law, other constitutional law or any other laws or regulations that may impact upon the transfer of information to this jurisdiction?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| A31. | No.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| Q32. | Does this jurisdiction have bank secrecy laws or other obligations of confidentiality (other than those that may have been accepted expressly under contract e.g. in account opening documentation)? If so, what data is subject to regulation?                                                                                                                                                             |
| A32. | No. A bank is under an obligation of secrecy under the Banking Contract regarding its customers' affairs. This obligation is a legal obligation arising out of the contract.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |

*GDP at purchaser's prices is the sum of gross value added by all resident producers in the economy plus any product taxes and minus any subsidies not included in the value of the products. It is calculated without making deductions for depreciation of fabricated assets or for depletion and degradation of natural resources. Data are in current U.S. dollars. Dollar figures for GDP are converted from domestic currencies using single year official exchange rates. For a few countries where the official exchange rate does not reflect the rate effectively applied to actual foreign exchange transactions, an alternative conversion factor is used.

| Q31. | Is there case law, other constitutional law or any other laws or regulations that may impact upon the transfer of information to this jurisdiction?                                                                                             |
| A31. | Yes.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| Q32. | Does this jurisdiction have bank secrecy laws or other obligations of confidentiality (other than those that may have been accepted expressly under contract e.g. in account opening documentation)? If so, what data is subject to regulation? |
| A32. | No. There is a general confidentiality obligation upon banks (s64 Banking Act 2004) to keep the information on their customers confidential. Such an obligation may only be lifted by way of a court order.                                     |

| A21. | Yes. Below the thresholds as stipulated in A20, transactions do not need to be reported according to the AML law. However, the threshold should be applied by taking into consideration all other qualitative characteristics of transactions and customers as stipulated by the AML law.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |

| Q2. | If the AML laws and/or regulations became effective in the last 2 years, what were the requirements of the previous AML regime?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| A2. | The main amendments to FICA do not detract from the original AML requirements but rather clarify areas in the law. The purpose of the amendments are inter alia to clarify the roles and responsibilities of supervisory bodies; authorise the Financial Intelligence Centre and supervisory bodies to conduct inspections; to provide for administrative sanctions and to make further provision for offences. Guidance Note 3A, issued in Mar 2013; rendered Guidance notes authoritative in nature, thus ensuring that accountable institutions adopt a risk based approach and take heed of High Risk clients and enhanced due diligence requirements for these.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |

| Q4. | Is there any practical guidance provided to firms by public authorities regarding AML requirements, beyond the FATF recommendations and local legislation? Please include link to website, where available.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| A4. | The FICA has issued various guidance notes with regards to AML requirements ( https://www.fic.gov.za/SiteContent/ContentPage.aspx?id=15 ).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| Q5. | Is there a requirement to retrospectively verify the identity of customers before the date the new AML regime was introduced?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| A5. | Yes. Banks and other accountable institutions were required to retrospectively identify and verify the identity and other information of all clients that held accounts with them at the time that the law became operational. An accountable institution that had an established business relationship with a client before the FICA took effect may not conclude a transaction in the course of that business relationship, unless it has taken the prescribed steps to establish and verify the identity of the client.                                                                     |
| Q6. | Is a risk based approach approved by the local regulator(s)?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| A6. | Yes, although the FICA, 38 of 2001 and the regulations do not expressly make reference to a risk-based approach, it is covered in Guidance Note 1 issued by the FIC in Ap 2004 and reinforced by Guidance Note 3A issued in Mar 2013. Guidance Notes were declared to be authoritative in nature at this date and therefore accountable institutions are expected to apply a risk-based approach inter alia in respect of customer relationships. The Act is currently being reviewed to incorporate a risk-based approach; we expect the amended Act to be promulgated during in 2016. |
| Q7. | Has the country been the subject of a FATF (or FATF-style) Mutual Evaluation or IMF assessment exercise in the last three years? If yes, please find a link to a relevant report (if publicly available).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

| Q8. | Are there minimum transaction thresholds, under which customer due diligence is not required?If Yes, what are the various thresholds in place?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| A8. | No. Due diligence is always required for all client relationships and single transactions, irrespective of the value involved. However the law does make a provision for certain exemptions where a reduced level of due diligence is permitted. These exemptions form part of the FICA regulations and affect various industries.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |

| Q10. | Where copies of identification documentation are provided, what are the requirements around independent verification or authentication?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| A10. | Although the FICA stipulates that a record must be kept of the identity document, it does not specify the requirements pertaining to authentication. In terms of the guidance notes and best practices, it would be sufficient to review the original identity document and to obtain a copy of a document which is either certified by a Commissioner of Oaths; or where the original has been sighted by an employee of the accountable institution, and an indication of such is made on the copy. Guidance is also provided on non face-to-face verification by the FIC. Where non face-to-face verification is accepted as a means, the verification methods used must be as effective as those that are applied to customers who are available for an interview.                                                                                                                                                                             |
| Q11. | What are the high level requirements around beneficial ownership (identification and verification)?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| A11. | The FICA stipulates, inter alia , that the identity of the client, or if the client is acting on behalf of another person, the person acting on behalf of the client, must be established and verified. The regulations have put in place measures to determine beneficial owners in respect of entities. For example, the particulars of every member and every representative of a close corporation must be obtained. In respect of a company the particulars of its manager and representatives must be provided as well as the particulars of its major shareholders who are able to exercise more than 25% of the votes at a general meeting of the company. In respect of trusts, the identity of the founder, beneficiaries and trustees must be established. The Act is currently being amended to include due diligence requirements for ultimate beneficial ownership; we expect these amendments to be promulgated during 2016. |
| Q12. | In what circumstances are reduced/simplified due diligence arrangements available?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| A12. | Depending on the risk profile, the level of due diligence is simplified for low risk clients or in respect of existing clients who are applying for different products. The exemptions, which form part of the FICA regulations, contain details of the circumstances under which reduced or simplified due diligence may be applied. Simplified due diligence applies inter alia to companies listed on approved stock exchanges (exemption 6) and banking products issued to customers subject to particular conditions and thresholds (exemption 17).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |

| A13. | The FICA Guidance note 3A states that accountable institutions should follow a risk-based approach to customer due-diligence. Clients are given a risk-rating based on various risk factors. High-risk client types, high risk transactions and services warrant enhanced due diligence procedures. Enhanced due diligence is also recommended when the client is identified as a PEP; when non-face-to-face verification is undertaken, if the client is a correspondent bank, money service business, intermediary or an employee account.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

| A17. | The FICA Regulations and guidance notes provide for instances in which client information is obtained in a non face-to-face situation. In such cases, banks "must take reasonable steps" to confirm the existence of the client and to verify the identity of the natural person involved, for example, receipt of faxes. In accepting business from non face-to-face customers banks should apply customer identification procedures to non face-to-face customers that are as effective as those that were applied to customers who were available for interview; there must be specific and adequate measures to mitigate the higher risk. Decisions concerning the additional steps to be taken in cases of a non face-to-face situation should be based on a bank's risk framework. |

| Q32. | Does this jurisdiction have bank secrecy laws or other obligations of confidentiality (other than those that may have been accepted expressly under contract e.g. in account opening documentation)? If so, what data is subject to regulation? |
| A32. | No. However, in terms of case law, the confidentiality of customer information is considered a qualified legal right that can be overridden by greater public interest.                                                                         |

|-----|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Q1. | In what year did the relevant AML laws and regulations become effective?                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| A1. | 2006 (with staggered implementation from 13 Dec 2006 to 12 Dec 2008, thus phasing in the new legislation and replacing the old). A second tranche to include accountants, lawyers, real estate and others has been delayed.                                   |
| A2. | There is no new legislation; however new AML/CTF Rules commenced in June 2014 primarily focused on customer due diligence.The old legislation (Financial Transaction Reports Act 1988) is still in force but applies to a limited number of entities. |
| Q3. | Who is the regulator for AML controls for: (a) Banking; (b) Other financial Services; (c) Non financial sector (e.g. casinos, high value goods etc.)? Please include link to the regulator(s) website                                                         |
| A3. | The Australian Transaction Reports and Analysis Centre ("AUSTRAC") regulates AML across all industry sectors: http://www.austrac.gov.au/                                                                             |
| Q4. | Is there any practical guidance provided to firms by public authorities regarding AML requirements, beyond the FATF recommendations and local legislation? Please include link to website, where available.                                                   |
| A4. | Guidance on AML requirements has been provided by AUSTRAC: http://www.austrac.gov.au/                                                                                                                                |
| Q5. | Is there a requirement to retrospectively verify the identity of customers before the date the new AML regime was introduced?                                                                                                                                 |
| A5. | No, although there are certain 'trigger events' that require a reporting entity to verify the identity of existing customers. An example of such a trigger event is the customer accessing a new product or service.                                          |
| A6. | Yes. This is the central theme of the AML regime.                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

| Q7. | Has the country been the subject of a FATF (or FATF-style) Mutual Evaluation or IMF assessment exercise in the last three years? If yes, please find a link to a relevant report (if publicly available).                                                                                         |
| A7. | Yes. Australia underwent a Mutual Evaluation in 2014 and 2015 which was released in April 2015: http://www.fatf-gafi.org/publications/mutualevaluations/documents/mer-australia-2015.html |

Customer Due Diligence

|     |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| Q8. | Are there minimum transaction thresholds, under which customer due diligence is not required?If Yes, what are the various thresholds in place?                                                                              |
| A8. | No, however a certain number of exemptions have been provided for transaction thresholds in industries including bullion, low value superannuation, gaming service providers and currency exchange at accommodation facilities. |

| Q11. | What are the high level requirements around beneficial ownership (identification and verification)?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| A11. | Under the new AML/CTF Rules commenced in June 2014: A reporting entity must collect and verify the full name and either the date of birth or address of all beneficial owners on all entity types. The reporting entity is not required to identify beneficial owners if the customer is a company which is verified under the simplified company verification procedure under paragraph 4.3.8 of the AML/CTF Rules 2007, or a trust which is verified under the simplified trustee verification procedure under paragraph 4.4.8 of the AML/CTF Rules 2007. The beneficial owner is defined as an individual who ultimately owns (25% or more) or controls (directly or indirectly) the customer. |
| Q12. | In what circumstances are reduced/simplified due diligence arrangements available?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| A12. | Simplified due diligence procedures are available to reporting entities in accordance with the risk based approach and procedures that they adopt. Certain pre-commencement customers are subject to modified identification procedures, in that those procedures do not have to be completed prior to the commencement (or continuation, in this case) of the designated service. For information on medium or low risk customers refer to chapter 4 of the AUSTRAC Regulatory Guide. Guide available at (http://www.austrac.gov.au/).                                                                                                                  |
| Q13. | In what circumstances are enhanced customer due diligence measures required?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| A13. | Enhanced due diligence procedures are required to be implemented by reporting entities in accordance with the risk based approach and procedures that they adopt. Risk triggers specified in the rules as requiring enhanced customer due diligence are where the provision of a designated service is high risk or when a suspicion has arisen. Also to be considered are prescribed foreign countries in relation to prohibition or regulation of transactions with them. Under the new AML/CTF Rules commenced in June 2014, a foreign PEP or the customer that has a foreign PEP as the beneficial owner must be subject to enhanced customer due diligence.                                         |
| Q14. | In what circumstances is additional due diligence required for Politically Exposed Persons ('PEPs')?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| A14. | Reporting entities are required to consider the risk posed by PEPs in accordance with the risk based approach and procedures that have been adopted by the reporting entity. As A13, under the new AML/CTF Rules commenced in June 2014, a foreign PEP or the customer that has a foreign PEP as the beneficial owner must be subject to enhanced customer due diligence.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| Q15. | What enhanced due diligence must be performed for correspondent banking relationships (cross-border banking and similar relationships)?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| A15. | Due diligence assessments must be carried out on the financial institution with which they wish to enter a correspondent banking relationship, prior to the commencement of the relationship and at regular intervals thereafter.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

| Q27. | If an external report on the bank’s AML systems and controls is required: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>a) how frequently must the report be provided?</li> <li>b) to whom should the report be submitted?</li> <li>c) part of the financial statement audit?</li> </ul>                                                                                                                                                  |
| A27. | As above, an independent review of the Program is required on a ‘regular’ basis. In practice this is conducted based on the bank’s risk-based approach, with many banks choosing to conduct the independent review on an annual basis. The report must be provided to the governing board and senior management. The regulator also requests a copy during their reviews. This does not constitute part of the financial statement audit. |

| A17. | Financial institutions should consider the money laundering risks posed by the products and services they offer, particularly where there is no face-to-face contact with the customer, and devise their procedures to that risk with due regard. Where there is no face-to-face contact, and photographic identification would clearly be inappropriate, procedures to identify and authenticate the customer should ensure that there is sufficient evidence, either documentary or electronic, to confirm address and personal identity. At least one additional check should be undertaken to guard against impersonation. In the event that internal procedures require sight of a current passport or ID Card where there is no face-to face contact, then a certified true copy should be obtained. | Q26. | Is there a legal requirement for a bank's external auditor/other external organisation to report on the bank's AML systems and controls?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| A26. | An external auditor may also play an important role in reviewing the adequacy of AML and CFT controls by communicating their findings and recommendations to management via the annual management letter, which accompanies the audit report. An external auditor would be risk-focused while developing their audit programs and conduct intensive reviews of higher risk areas where controls may be deficient. External auditors may report incidences of suspected criminal activity uncovered during audits in its audit report. | A2. | Prior to the Anti-Money Laundering Law, China issued three main regulations on monitoring and reporting large-sum and suspicious transactions within financial institutions in 2003, requiring financial institutions to take the responsibilities for identifying, monitoring and reporting of doubtful and suspicious capital flow. Previously the regulations applied to crimes of drugs, crimes committed by organized criminal gangs, crimes of terrorism, and crimes of smuggling. This has been specifically broadened to bribery and corruption crimes, crimes of disrupting the control of financial order and crimes of financial frauds. In late 2012, the central bank issued "Guidelines for the Assessment of Money Laundering and Terrorism Financing Risks and Categorized Management of Customers of Financial Institutions" that requires Financial Institutions to add a money laundering risk scoring to each of their customers. Please refer to A1 above.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

| A6. | Yes. According to Anti-Money Laundering Law of the People's Republic of China issued in 2006, in Article 17, it states that "Where a financial institution identifies the identity of its clients through a third party, it shall be guaranteed that the third party has adopted the measures for clients' identity clarification as required by the present Law. Where any third party fails to adopt the measures for the clients' identity clarification as prescribed by the present Law, the financial institution shall bear the liabilities for its failure to perform the obligation of clarifying the client's identity." With the issuance of the latest KYC regulations in 2007, regulators require financial institutions to establish a risk-based KYC approach and report to PBOC. At the end of 2012, PBOC issued a new guideline called "Guidelines for the Assessment of Money Laundering and Terrorism Financing Risks and Categorized Management of Customers of Financial Institutions". In the new guideline, PBOC required Financial Institutions to take into consideration customer background, products, and geographical location as risk factors. All Financial Institutions need to report to the PBOC the new model by Mar 2013 and complete the implementation by end of 2015.                                                                                                                                                  |

| A11. | According to "Notice of the People's Bank of China on Further Strengthening the Anti-Money Laundering Work of Financial Institutions" issued in 2008, financial institutions shall strengthen the maintenance and management of client identity data to ensure the accuracy and validity of client identity data. For the natural person who actually controls the client and actual beneficiary of transactions stated in "Identification Measures", it includes but is not limited to two types of people: the first is the actual controller, and the second is person who actually controls the transactions or enjoys relevant financial benefit but is not disclosed by the client (except for the agent). Financial institutions shall carry out such work as checking clients' valid identity certificates (identity documents) or re-identifying clients through inquiry of client, obtaining corroboration evidence from clients or using investigation agents, depending on the situations. |

| A19. | Volume of SARs:2014 – 17,725,300 SARs (Source: 2014 Annual Report PBOC) GDP (in current prices)2014 – USD10,360,000m (Source: data.worldbank.org*) This results in a ratio of 1 SAR for every USD584,475 of GDP. |

* GDP at purchaser's prices is the sum of gross value added by all resident producers in the economy plus any product taxes and minus any subsidies not included in the value of the products. It is calculated without making deductions for depreciation of fabricated assets or for depletion and degradation of natural resources. Data are in current U.S. dollars. Dollar figures for GDP are converted from domestic currencies using single year official exchange rates. For a few countries where the official exchange rate does not reflect the rate effectively applied to actual foreign exchange transactions, an alternative conversion factor is used.

| A29. | China does not have Data Privacy Laws. Protection of "Personal Data" is governed by different laws and regulations for different purposes. Generally speaking, as long as the data is used within China, no law prohibits personal data to be held for KYC purpose. For the purpose of AML/KYC, there is no definition of "sensitive data". However the financial institutions should observe "Consumer Protection Law Art. 29": <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>a) business operators shall collect and use the personal information of consumers in a lawful and proper manner by following the principle that information collection or use is genuinely necessary. They shall expressly state the purposes, methods and scope of information collection or use, and obtain the consent of the consumers whose information is to be collected. To collect or use the personal information of consumers, business operators shall disclose their information collection or use rules, and shall not collect or use information in violation of laws or regulations, or in breach of the agreements between the parties concerned;</li> <li>b) business operators and their staff members shall strictly keep confidential the personal information of consumers collected, and shall not divulge, sell or illegally provide others with the same. Business operators shall take technical measures and other necessary measures to ensure information security and prevent the personal information of consumers from being leaked or lost. They shall immediately take remedial measures where information has been or may be leaked or lost; and</li> <li>c) business operators shall not send commercial information to consumers without their consent or request, or after the consumers have expressly refused to receive such information.</li> </ul> |

| A5. | No, although under the revised guidelines, enhanced AML assessment requirements are expected to be applied to all customers, including existing customers. As part of their ongoing AML due diligence process, intermediaries should consider and determine whether additional identification information, in line with the current standards, should be obtained from all existing customers, particularly those customers in higher risk categories. In particular, authorised institutions regulated by the HKMA are required to conduct a review, at least once annually, on all high risk customers to ensure that the customer's records maintained are up-to-date and relevant. Under the AMLO, the identity of pre-existing customers is not subject to retrospective verification. The AMLO only requires the financial institution to review the documents, data and information relating to the customer that is held at the time it conducts the review.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

| Q8.  | Are there minimum transaction thresholds, under which customer due diligence is not required?If Yes, what are the various thresholds in place?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| A8.  | Generally speaking, the current legislation does not specifically set out minimum transaction thresholds where customer due diligence is, or is not, required. However, less stringent due diligence requirements would be permitted in certain circumstances, such as: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>a) a remittance/exchange transaction carried out by remittance agents/money changers, where the transaction amount is less than HKD8,000 (approx. USD1,030) or equivalent; or</li> <li>b) a transaction carried out by authorised institutions on behalf of a non-account holder, where the transaction amount is less than HKD120,000 (approx. USD15,460) or equivalent.</li> </ul>                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |

| A14. | Local regulatory guidance includes a requirement to gather sufficient information from a new customer and check publicly available information to establish whether or not the customer is a PEP. The decision to open an account for a PEP should be taken at a senior management level. A number of risk factors that institutions should consider in handling a business relationship with a PEP are also outlined.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

| A15. | A bank providing correspondent banking services is required to gather sufficient information about its respondent banks to understand their business. Approval from senior management should be sought before establishing new correspondent banking relationships and the respective responsibilities of each institution should be documented. A corresponding banking relationship should not be established unless it is satisfied that the AML/CFT controls of the proposed respondent bank are adequate and effective. Particular care is required if a correspondent banking relationship is maintained with banks incorporated in jurisdictions that do not meet international AML standards, or where the respondent banks allow the direct use of the correspondent account by their customers to transact business on their own behalf (i.e. payable-through accounts). |

* GDP at purchaser's prices is the sum of gross value added by all resident producers in the economy plus any product taxes and minus any subsidies not included in the value of the products. It is calculated without making deductions for depreciation of fabricated assets or for depletion and degradation of natural resources. Data are in current U.S. dollars. Dollar figures for GDP are converted from domestic currencies using single year official exchange rates. For a few countries where the official exchange rate does not reflect the rate effectively applied to actual foreign exchange transactions, an alternative conversion factor is used

| A24. | Institutions are required to refrain from carrying out transactions which they know or suspect to be related to money laundering until they have informed the JFIU which consents to the institution carrying out the transactions. Where it is impossible to refrain or if this is likely to frustrate efforts to pursue the beneficiaries of a suspected money laundering operation, institutions may carry out the transactions and notify JFIU on their own initiative and as soon as it is reasonable for them to do so. |

| A26. | According to s.59 (2) of the Banking Ordinance, HKMA may, as it thinks necessary (e.g. when actual/potential control or supervisory issues within the Bank were identified), direct a bank to submit a report prepared by an external auditor on prescribed subject matters. These include, inter alia, AML systems and controls. |

| Q27. | If an external report on the bank's AML systems and controls is required: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>a) how frequently must the report be provided?</li> <li>b) to whom should the report be submitted?</li> <li>c) part of the financial statement audit?</li> </ul>                                                                                                                                                         |
| A27. | As above, an independent review of the Program is required on a 'regular' basis. In practice this is conducted based on the bank's risk-based approach, with many banks choosing to conduct the independent review on an annual basis. The report must be provided to the governing board and senior management. The regulator also requests a copy during their reviews. This does not constitute part of the financial statement audit. |

| Q28. | What are the requirements for the content of this external report on a bank's AML systems and controls? Does it require: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>a) sample testing of KYC files?</li> <li>b) sample testing of SAR reports?</li> <li>c) examination of risk assessments?</li> </ul>              |
| A28. | The scope of work varies depending upon the circumstances which trigger the review as mandated by the HKMA. However, in a comprehensive AML review carried out by external auditors, sample testing of KYC files/SAR reports and examination of risk assessments would normally form part of the scope of work. |

| Q29. | Does the country have established data protection laws? If so:a) does the definition of "personal data" cover material likely to be held for KYC purposes?b) how do the laws apply to corporate data?c) does this country have a separate definition of "sensitive data"? How is it defined and what are the additional protections?                                                                                                     |
| A29. | The primary data protection law in Hong Kong is the Personal Data (Privacy) Ordinance ("PDPO"). Under the PDPO, personal data means any data relating directly or indirectly to a living individual; from which it is practicable for the identity of the individual to be directly or indirectly ascertained; and in a form in which access to or processing of the data is practicable. The PDPO does not define corporate data or sensitive data. |

There is prohibition against transfer of personal data to place outside Hong Kong except in specified circumstances.                                       |
| Q31. | Is there case law, other constitutional law or any other laws or regulations that may impact upon the transfer of information to this jurisdiction?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| A31. | We are not aware of any such laws or regulations that may significantly impact upon the transfer of information to Hong Kong.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| Q32. | Does this jurisdiction have bank secrecy laws or other obligations of confidentiality (other than those that may have been accepted expressly under contract e.g. in account opening documentation)? If so, what data is subject to regulation?                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| A32. | There is no specific bank secrecy law in Hong Kong. It should, however, be noted that banks are subject to confidentiality obligations which are applicable under common law (i.e. the legal framework adopted by Hong Kong) and the regulators also expect that banks duly protect the use of its customer data in the normal course of business.                                                                                                   |

| A1. | The Prevention of Money Laundering Act 2002 ("PMLA") came into force in Jul 2005. Current Amendment to the PMLA in 2012 became operational with effect from 15 Feb 2013.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| A2. | Amendment to the PMLA was enacted on 17 Dec 2012 and came into effect on 15 Feb 2013. The highlights of the amendments are as follows: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>a) the scope of money laundering activities has been broadened to include proceeds of crime including its concealment, possession, acquisition, or use and projecting and claiming, making mere possession of proceeds of crime an offence;</li> <li>b) possession of money received from criminal proceeds is also classified as crime;</li> <li>c) the threshold limit (earlier INR3m (approx. USD45,000)) for initiating money laundering cases has been removed;</li> <li>d) penalty schemes for money laundering activities have been revisited;</li> <li>e) the imprisonment term has been lengthened from at least three years to a maximum of seven years; and</li> <li>f) the upper limit for fines of INR500,000 (approx. USD7,500) has been removed (i.e. there is no upper limit fixed).</li> </ul> |

| A6. | Yes, the local regulators (RBI, IRDA and SEBI) allow banking companies, financial institutions and intermediaries to use a risk based approach. On the basis of a risk based approach, verification of identity is done for high risk customers every two years, medium risk customers every eight years and low risk customers every ten years. A review of risk categorisation of accounts should be carried out at a periodicity of not less than once in six months.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| Q7. | Has the country been the subject of a FATF (of FATF-style) Mutual Evaluation or IMF assessment exercise in the last three years? If yes, please find a link to a relevant report (if publicly available).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| A7. | The first Mutual Evaluation report on India was adopted on 24 Jun 2010 and recommended that India be placed in a regular follow-up process for mutual evaluation processes. The 8th Follow Up Report on the Mutual Evaluation of India was published in Jun 2013 and can be found at (http://www.fatf-gafi.org/media/fatf/documents/reports/mer/India_FUR8_2013.pdf). The report concluded that India had made sufficient progress for all core and key recommendations and recommended that India be removed from the follow-up procedure. In Jan 2013, the IMF published its update entitled 'India: Financial System Stability Assessment Update' which can be found here: http://www.imf.org/external/pubs/ft/scr/2013/cr1308.pdf |

| Q8. | Are there minimum transaction thresholds, under which customer due diligence is not required?If Yes, what are the various thresholds in place?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| A8. | In the case of transactions carried out by a non-account based customer (walk-in customer) where the amount of the transaction is lower than INR50,000 (approx. USD750), the customer's identity and address do not require verification. However, if a bank has reason to believe that a customer is intentionally structuring a transaction into a series of transactions below the threshold of INR50,000 (approx. USD750), the bank should verify the identity and address of the customer and also consider filling in a suspicious transaction report. Verification of identity must be conducted in respect of all cross border payments. |

| A12. | Customers can be categorised based on their risk profile. For example, individuals and entities whose identities and sources of wealth can be easily identified may be categorised as low risk. Reduced due diligence arrangements may be followed by the banking company, financial institution or intermediary in the case of low risk customers. The review of low risk clients' KYC documents can be performed once every ten years as per RBI circular dated 23 Jul 2013. In addition, under RBI Circular on KYC dated 10 Dec 2012, norms were further simplified to have only one document for both identity and address if the address on the document submitted for identity proof is the same as that declared in the account opening form. Introduction from an existing customer of the bank is not mandatory when documents of identity and address are provided.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

| A14. | Banks should gather sufficient information on any person/customer of this category intending to establish a relationship and check all the information available on the person in the public domain. Banks should verify the identity of the person and seek information about their source of funds before accepting the PEP as a customer. The decision to open an account for a PEP should be taken at a senior level which should be clearly identified in the Customer Acceptance policy. Banks should also subject such accounts to enhanced monitoring on an ongoing basis. The above may also be applied to the accounts of the family members or close relatives of PEPs. In the case of an existing customer or the beneficial owner of an existing account subsequently becoming a PEP, banks should obtain senior management approval to continue the business relationship and subject the account to the customer due diligence measures as applicable to the customers of a PEP category including enhanced monitoring on an ongoing basis. These instructions are also applicable to accounts where a PEP is the ultimate beneficial owner. Further, banks should have appropriate ongoing risk management procedures for identifying and applying enhanced customer due diligence to PEPs, customers who are close relatives of PEPs, and accounts of which a PEP is the ultimate beneficial owner. |

| A17. | In the case of non-face-to-face customers, apart from applying the usual customer identification procedures, banks must adopt specific and adequate procedures to mitigate the higher risk involved. Certification of all the documents presented should be insisted upon and, additional documents may be called for in such cases. In the case of cross-border customers, there is the additional difficulty of matching the customer with the documentation and the bank may have to rely on third party certification/ introduction. In such cases, it must be ensured that the third party is a regulated and supervised entity and has adequate KYC systems in place. Additionally, the first transaction should be through a cheque issued from an existing bank account. |

| A20. | Yes, as per the RBI and FIU guidelines, all banking institutions are required to report all such activities in terms of STR (on occurrence), Cash Transaction Reports and Counterfeit Currency Reports (periodically as per timelines laid down by the regulators) including all transactions involving receipts by non-profit organisations of value more than INR1m (approx. USD15,000) or its equivalent in foreign currency. |

| A21. | Cash transactions below INR50,000 (approx. USD750) need not be reported. However, if there is a suspicion of deliberate effort to structure the transactions in such a way to keep the transaction just below the threshold, then such activities need to be reported as an STR. |

| A25. | Yes. Section 2.17 of the RBI's Master Circular (01 Jul 2013) on KYC norms/AML standards/Combating of Financing of Terrorism /Obligation of banks under PMLA, 2002 stipulates: "The guidelines contained in this master circular shall apply to the branches and majority owned subsidiaries located abroad, especially, in countries which do not or insufficiently apply the FATF Recommendations, to the extent local laws permit. When local applicable laws and regulations prohibit implementation of these guidelines, the same should be brought to the notice of Reserve Bank. In case there is a variance in KYC/AML standards prescribed by the Reserve Bank and the host country regulators, branches/overseas subsidiaries of banks are required to adopt the more stringent regulation of the two." |

| A30. | Since banks collect Sensitive Personal Data or Information ("SPDI"), they need to comply with the Rules, which lay down certain procedures to be followed at the time of collection of data, transfer of data, and disposal of data, and to maintain relevant security practices and procedures. In the event a bank is negligent in implementing and maintaining "reasonable security practices and procedures" in relation to SPDI, which causes "wrongful loss or wrongful gain" to any person, then the bank is liable to pay compensation to the affected person whose SPDI was compromised. The aggrieved person claiming compensation may approach an adjudicating officer appointed under the Act in the case of damages of up to INR50m (approx. USD750,800) or before the civil court in case the damages claimed are above INR50m (approx. USD750,100). The Personal Data Protection Bill 2006 protects the privacy of individuals, but the bill was not passed into law. In the meantime, the Act was amended in 2008 to include Section 43A and Section 72A to protect personal data ("PI") and SPDI. |

| A31. | The Personal Data Protection Bill 2006 and Information Technology Act, 2000. The Information Technology Act provides for recognition of electronic signatures, e-documents and e-transactions, and seeks to control offences conducted over the internet. Also, post-2001, the RBI introduced guidelines governing internet banking, confidentiality, anti-money laundering and KYC norms, which may have prompted customers to move towards the e-platform, albeit with some concerns with respect to the privacy and security of their banking transactions.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |

| Q20. | Are there any obligations to report anything more than suspicious transactions e.g. unusual transactions, cash transactions above a certain threshold, international wire transfers, other transactions etc.?                                                                                                                                           |
| A20. | Yes, there is an obligation to make cash transaction reports ("CTR") and international funds transfer reports ("IFTs"). The former is a requirement after a certain threshold value for transactions has been revealed, while the latter, IFTs, are required for both incoming and outgoing transfers without any threshold for the transaction amount. |

| A1. | Based on the revisions of the Financial Action Task Force ("FATF") 40 Recommendations in 2003, Japan enacted the Act on the Prevention of Transfer of Criminal Proceeds 2007. The Act was amended on 28 Apr 2011 and came into force on 01 Apr 2013. Several other laws implemented for Anti-Money Laundering measures include the Anti-Drug Special Prevention Law 1992 and Act on the Punishment of Organised Crime 2000. The Act on The Prevention of Transfer of Criminal Proceeds is being updated and will be enacted in Oct 2016. |
| Q2. | If the AML laws and/or regulations became effective in the last 2 years, what were the requirements of the previous AML regime?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| A2. | The amendments in 2011 expanded the types of information requested as part of the KYC process. Where previously, under the Act on Prevention of Transfer of Criminal Proceeds, the customer identification information for verification was as follows.Natural person: Name, address, date of birth.Legal person: Name, location of the head or main office.                                                                                                                                               |
| Q3. | Who is the regulator for AML controls for: (a) Banking; (b) Other financial Services; (c) Non financial sector (e.g. casinos, high value goods etc.)? Please include link to the regulator(s) website                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| A3. | Japan Financial Services Agency ("FSA"): http://www.fsa.go.jp/en/index.htmlThere are respective regulatory agencies for each business operator: http://www.npa.go.jp/sosikihanzai/jafic/index_e.htm                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| Q4. | Is there any practical guidance provided to firms by public authorities regarding AML requirements, beyond the FATF recommendations and local legislation? Please include link to website, where available.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| A4. | The FSA has issued comprehensive supervisory guidelines for the financial sector. Although they are general guidelines for financial institutions, it contains some guidance regarding Anti-Money Laundering compliance. See ( http://www.fsa.go.jp/en/refer/legislation/index.html ).                                                                                                                                                                                |
| Q5. | Is there a requirement to retrospectively verify the identity of customers before the date the new AML regime was introduced?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| A5. | Financial institutions are required to verify the identity of customers upon undertaking the specified transactions from pre-existing customers, where customer identification was not undertaken before the implementation of the Act on Prevention of Transfer of Criminal Proceeds.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |

| A6. | Despite the fact that the AML regime in Japan is not risk based, some aspects of this approach are incorporated into the guidelines issued by the FSA. Banks are expected to establish and maintain an internal control environment to detect, monitor, and analyse suspicious customers, considering various factors such as customer attributes, transaction types and customer business profiles. In addition, the Japanese Bankers Association issued the "Guidance Note on the Risk based Approach" in Nov 2007 for combating money laundering and terrorist financing. The Guidance Note is available for member banks and advises on the implementation of the risk based approach. |

* GDP at purchaser's prices is the sum of gross value added by all resident producers in the economy plus any product taxes and minus any subsidies not included in the value of the products. It is calculated without making deductions for depreciation of fabricated assets or for depletion and degradation of natural resources. Data are in current U.S. dollars. Dollar figures for GDP are converted from domestic currencies using single year official exchange rates. For a few countries where the official exchange rate does not reflect the rate effectively applied to actual foreign exchange transactions, an alternative conversion factor is used.

| A11. | The reporting institution must identify and verify the beneficial owner. They should conduct customer due diligence on the natural person that ultimately owns or controls the customer's transaction when they suspect the transaction is conducted on behalf of a beneficial owner and not the customer who is conducting such a transaction. The customer due diligence conducted should be as stringent as that imposed on an individual customer.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

| A12. | A simplified customer due diligence process is adopted for lower risk categories of customers, business relationships or transactions. The relevant simplified process may vary from case to case depending on the customer's background, transaction type and specific circumstances.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| Q13. | In what circumstances are enhanced customer due diligence measures required?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| A13. | Local AML guidance requires an enhanced customer due diligence process for higher risk categories of customers, business relationships or transactions. Enhanced due diligence should include at least obtaining more detailed information from the customer and through publicly available information, in particular, on the purpose of the transaction and source of funds; and obtaining approval from the Senior Management of the reporting institution before establishing the business relationship with the customer. Examples of higher risk customers are individuals with high net worth, non-resident customers, individuals from locations known for their high rates of crime (e.g. drug producing, trafficking, smuggling), countries or jurisdictions with inadequate AML/CFT laws and regulations as highlighted by the FATF, PEPs, legal arrangements that are complex (e.g. trusts, nominee companies), cash based businesses and businesses/activities identified by the FATF as of higher money laundering and/or terrorist financing risk.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |

| Q5. | Is there a requirement to retrospectively verify the identity of customers before the date the new AML regime was introduced?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| A5. | Under the AMLCFTA, reporting entities are required to conduct on-going Customer Due Diligence (“CDD”) (or “KYC”). Reporting entities are required to have “triggers” or similar built into their AML systems, to enable on-going CDD to be carried out. Specifically, reporting entities are required to re-verify existing customers where there is both a material change in the nature or purpose of the business relationship and the reporting entity considers that it has insufficient information on that customer. For anonymous accounts, a reporting entity is required to undertake standard customer due diligence when it becomes aware of existing anonymous accounts regardless of whether a material change in the nature or purpose of the business relationship has occurred.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |

| A1. | The Anti-Money Laundering Act was enacted in Mar 2010 after its approval by the Parliament of Pakistan. In addition, local banking regulator, the State Bank of Pakistan ("SBP"), has issued detailed AML and CFT regulations, together with guidelines on a risk based approach in 2012; both of which have subsequently been amended, and revised regulations issued in 2015. These guidelines can be found at the following links: http://www.sbp.org.pk/l_frame/Revised-AML-CFT-Regulations.pdf and http://www.sbp.org.pk/l_frame/AML-CFT-Guidelines-RiskBasedApproach.pdf                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| Q2. | If the AML laws and/or regulations became effective in the last 2 years, what were the requirements of the previous AML regime?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |
| A2. | The AML Ordinance was issued in 2007 followed by the Anti-Money Laundering Act in 2010. Subsequently AML and CFT regulations were issued in 2012 which were subject to amendments that have been incorporated in the revised regulations issued in 2015. The previous regulations required the following (which have now been stringently amended for inclusion in the revised regulations): <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>a) verification of the identity of the customers shall be completed as soon as it is reasonably practicable but not later than five business days from the date of opening of the account;</li> <li>b) half yearly list is to be maintained by banks/DFIs highlighting all accounts/deposits where the business relationship needed to be closed on account of negative verification;</li> <li>c) obtain copy of CNIC from occasional customers/walk-in customers conducting cash transactions above INR1m (approx. USD15,000) whether carried out in a single operation or in multiple operations that appear to be linked; and</li> <li>d) currency Transaction Reports should be reported above the threshold of INR2.5m (approx. USD38,000).</li> </ul> |
| Q3. | Who is the regulator for AML controls for: (a) Banking; (b) Other financial Services; (c) Non-financial sector (e.g. casinos, high value goods etc.). Please include link to the regulator(s) website                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |

| A8. | None. The AMLA defines 'covered transactions' as single transactions in cash or other equivalent monetary instruments involving a total amount in excess of PHP500,000 (approx. USD10,640) within one banking day, except for jewellery dealers in precious metals and stones who are required to report a single transaction equal to PHP1m (approx. USD21,280) or above. Regardless of whether these are covered transactions, the establishment and recording of the true identity of clients of Covered Institutions would cover all their clients. |

| A29. | The Data Protection Act (Republic Act [RA] 10173) was signed into law 15 Aug 2012. It protects the integrity and confidentiality of individual personal information and communications systems in the government and the private sector, by penalising the unauthorised disclosure of personal information. It specifically exempts, however, information necessary for banks and financial institutions as part of anti-money laundering efforts, and personal data processed by central monetary authorities and law enforcement and regulatory agencies, among others: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>a) personal data as defined under Section 3(g) of RA 10173 refers to any information whether recorded in a material form or not, from which the identity of an individual is apparent or can be reasonably and directly ascertained by the entity holding the information, or when put together with other information would directly and certainly identify an individual. From the definition it likely covers information used for KYC purposes, and the specific exemption only applies to agencies, etc. that are implementing anti-money laundering laws;</li> <li>b) there is no specific provision in the Data Protection law that covers corporate data. However, it provides that processing of personal information is regulated by the law and applies to natural and juridical persons involved in personal information processing; and</li> <li>c) the Data Protection law likewise provides a separate definition for "sensitive personal information" such that it refers to personal information: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>a. about an individual's race, ethnic origin, marital status, age, colour, and religious, philosophical or political affiliations;</li> <li>b. about an individual's health, education, genetic or sexual life of a person, or to any proceeding for any offense committed or alleged to have been committed by such person, the disposal of such proceedings, or the sentence of any court in such proceedings;</li> <li>c. issued by government agencies peculiar to an individual which includes, but not limited to, social security numbers, previous or current health records, licenses or its denials, suspension or revocation, and tax returns; and</li> <li>d. specifically established by an executive order or an act of Congress to be kept classified.</li> </ul> </li> </ul> Lawful processing of personal information is allowed under the law, subject to certain conditions and requirements that must be complied with. On the other hand, processing of sensitive personal information is prohibited, except under specific exempt circumstances as provided under Section 13 of the Act. There is also a higher penalty imposed for unlawful processing of sensitive personal information (imprisonment ranging from 3 years to 6 years, and a fine of PHP500,000 (approx. USD10,640) to a maximum of PHP4m (approx. USD85,120). |

| Q31. | Is there case law, other constitutional law or any other laws or regulations that may impact upon the transfer of information to this jurisdiction?                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
| A31. | Transfer of information is restricted and subject to the provisions of Presidential Decree (PD) No 1718, issued in 1980, that restricts the transfer of information vital to Philippine national interests to foreign jurisdictions. In this regard, prior approval from the Office of the President of the Philippines must first be obtained before any such transfer is made. |
| Q32. | Does this jurisdiction have bank secrecy laws or other obligations of confidentiality (other than those that may have been accepted expressly under contract e.g. in account opening documentation)? If so, what data is subject to regulation?                                                                                                                                  |
| A32. | Yes, the Philippines has a Bank Secrecy Law (RA 1405), which provides that all deposits with banks or banking institutions in the Philippines are considered confidential, and may only be inquired into and examined upon written permission of the depositor, or upon order of the courts.                                                                                     |

| A8.  | Customer due diligence is required. However the extent of due diligence performed may vary based on the risk. For example, in respect of simplified customer due diligence, the regulation states that a bank may perform such simplified customer due diligence measures as it considers adequate to effectively identify and verify the identity of the customer, a natural person appointed to act on the customer's behalf and any beneficial owner, if it is satisfied that the risks of money laundering and terrorist financing are low (certain conditions apply).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

* GDP at purchaser's prices is the sum of gross value added by all resident producers in the economy plus any product taxes and minus any subsidies not included in the value of the products. It is calculated without making deductions for depreciation of fabricated assets or for depletion and degradation of natural resources. Data are in current U.S. dollars. Dollar figures for GDP are converted from domestic currencies using single year official exchange rates. For a few countries where the official exchange rate does not reflect the rate effectively applied to actual foreign exchange transactions, an alternative conversion factor is used.

| Q26. | Is there a legal requirement for a bank's external auditor/other external organisation to report on the bank's AML systems and controls?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| A26. | No. However, banks are required to maintain an audit function that is adequately resourced and independent, and that is able to regularly assess the effectiveness of the bank's internal policies, procedures and controls, and its compliance with regulatory requirements. A bank's AML/CFT framework should be subject to periodic audits (including sample testing). Such audits should be performed not just on individual business functions but also on a bank-wide basis. Auditors should assess the effectiveness of measures taken to prevent ML/TF. The frequency and extent of the audit should be commensurate with the ML/TF risks presented and the size and complexity of the bank's business. |

| A2. | Under the 2005 amendment, responsibility for customer due diligence and filing of Cash Transaction Reports ("CTRs") was imposed. Customer due diligence has been self-controlled by each financial institution and is now compulsory in the 2007 regulations. In 2013, the requirement to report a specific amount of financial transactions as Suspicious Transaction Reports ("STRs") was abolished. In the case of sending money through wire transfers, financial institutions should report related information to the Korea Financial Intelligence Unit ("KoFIU"). An amendment of the 'Act on Reporting and Using Specified Financial Transaction Information' requires the identification of the beneficial owners and/or customers. Financial institutions may reject transactions with customers who refuse to provide information (Enforcement Date: Jan.1, 2016). |

| Q22. | Are there any penalties for non-compliance with reporting requirements e.g. tipping off?                                                                                                                                |
| A22. | Yes, imprisonment for a period not exceeding 1 year or a fine not exceeding KRW10 million (approx. USD8,000) per individual responsible for SAR reporting.                                                              |
| Q23. | Are there any requirements (legal or regulatory) to use automated Suspicious Transaction monitoring technology?                                                                                                         |
| A23. | No, recommended to apply a transaction monitoring system.                                                                                                                                                               |

* GDP at purchaser's prices is the sum of gross value added by all resident producers in the economy plus any product taxes and minus any subsidies not included in the value of the products. It is calculated without making deductions for depreciation of fabricated assets or for depletion and degradation of natural resources. Data are in current U.S. dollars. Dollar figures for GDP are converted from domestic currencies using single year official exchange rates. For a few countries where the official exchange rate does not reflect the rate effectively applied to actual foreign exchange transactions, an alternative conversion factor is used.

| A14. | In the case of an over-the-counter request for account-opening, a financial institution must conduct due diligence on whether a customer is a foreign PEP with a database established and maintained by the financial institution, or outside information sources. Secondly, practical guidance requires that heightened risk control measures and regular review thereof must apply to such foreign PEPs.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |

| A25. | Under Taiwan’s Personal Data Protection Act, in order for transactions to be monitored outside Taiwan’s jurisdiction, either the prior written consent of the data subject must be obtained, or such monitoring outside the jurisdiction must be specifically required by law or to advance public interests. As of Nov 2014, there is no express law or regulation in Taiwan that authorises or requires the monitoring of transactions outside Taiwan’s jurisdiction. However, since Taiwan is a member of the Egmont Group and the Asia/Pacific Group on Money Laundering, and has executed cooperative memorandum of understanding with a number of countries for information exchange purpose, Taiwan’s Investigation Bureau, after receiving reports from financial institutions, has the discretion to share such information and transactions outside Taiwan’s jurisdiction. Therefore, while there is not yet express law or regulation in Taiwan that allows the monitoring of transactions outside Taiwan, such information is monitored outside Taiwan in practice by operation of law. |

| Q5. | Is there a requirement to retrospectively verify the identity of customers before the date the new AML regime was introduced?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| A5. | Yes. There is a requirement to conduct CDD on existing customers where a relationship was established before the CDD regulation was stipulated and the relationship still exists (refer to item 26 of the revised Ministerial Regulation on CDD dated 11 Jul 2013). The AMLO issued more detailed guidelines on how to conduct CDD for existing clients (Refer to AMLO notification dated 11 Oct 2013 and effective from 9 Nov 2013). |
| Q6. | Is a risk based approach approved by the local regulator(s)?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| A6. | Yes. It's a principle that the bank shall take into account risk factors from the client and the area/country, in order to assess the ML risk.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |

| Q17. | In what circumstances is additional due diligence required for non face-to-face transactions and/or relationships?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| A17. | Institutions should establish risk mitigating procedures and measures for account openings for non face-to-face customers and should have effective monitoring procedures as stringent as those for customers who are physically present. Please see details in item 47 of the Ministerial regulation on CDD dated 11 Jul 2013: http://www.amlo.go.th/amlofarm/farm/web/files/MR%20CDD%202013.pdf Article 47 Financial institutions and persons engaging in professions under section 16 (1) and (9) may rely on third parties in verifying the customer identification in accordance with Article 19 (1), (2), (3) and (4), Article 20 and Article 22 or to introduce business provided that the following criteria are met: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>a) it obtains the necessary information relating to the requirements under Article 19 (1), (2), (3) and (4), Article 20 and Article 22 from the third party;</li> <li>b) copies of documents or identification information and other relevant documentation and information of customers relating to the requirements under Article 19 (1), (2), (3) and (4), Article 20 and Article 22 shall be made available from the third party upon request without delay;</li> <li>c) the third party is under proper supervision and monitoring, and has measures in place for compliance with CDD and record keeping requirements in accordance with the rules and procedures set out in this Ministerial Regulation; and</li> <li>d) in the case of a third party being subject to rules of many countries, consideration is given to the reliability of those countries based on their level of money laundering and terrorist financing risk.</li> </ul> In the case where a third party is a financial institution, and persons are engaging in professions under section 16 (1) and (9) that is part of the same financial group and financial institution and persons engaging in professions under section 16 (1) and (9) apply CDD measures and record-keeping requirements, and act in line with Article 49, Article 50 and Article 51, and where the effective implementation of those requirements is supervised by a competent authority, it shall be deemed that the financial institution and persons engaging in professions under section 16 (1) and (9) apply measures under (3) and (4) above through its group programme. The above provisions do not apply to an outsourcing or agency relationship. Reliance on third parties means reliance (on the third party) for performing the requirements under paragraph one and record-keeping requirements under the supervision and monitoring of the competent authority within the Ministerial Regulation. The third party may have an existing business relationship with the customer, which is independent from the relationship to be formed by the customer with the relying institution, and would apply its own procedures to perform the CDD measures. This reliance on a third party is contrasted with an outsourcing/agency relationship, in which the outsourced entity applies the CDD measures on behalf of the delegating financial institution, in accordance with its procedures, and is subject to the delegating financial institution's control. Financial institutions and persons engaging in professions under section 16 (1) and (9) shall be held responsible where a third party fails to apply CDD procedures or recordkeeping requirements, or fails to fully comply with these procedures. A third party shall be a financial institution or person engaging in professions under section 16 (1) and (9) under the supervision of the competent authority. |

* GDP at purchaser's prices is the sum of gross value added by all resident producers in the economy plus any product taxes and minus any subsidies not included in the value of the products. It is calculated without making deductions for depreciation of fabricated assets or for depletion and degradation of natural resources. Data are in current U.S. dollars. Dollar figures for GDP are converted from domestic currencies using single year official exchange rates. For a few countries where the official exchange rate does not reflect the rate effectively applied to actual foreign exchange transactions, an alternative conversion factor is used.

| A9.  | Individuals: The law established two types of customers: 'permanent' and 'not frequent'. For each type of customer specific documentation is required, which varies from a simple identification to a tax declaration. Names are verified against original documents for both individuals and entities. 'Not frequent' customers who are individuals need to provide full name, birth place and date, citizenship, etc.Entities must provide: name, identification number, tax identification number, Constitution Act and date, etc. Legal officers and shareholders must provide the same information. In addition, 'Permanent' customers need to provide: information on sources of income and financial information of accounts/investments in other financial entities. All information must be supported by proper documentation. |

* GDP at purchaser's prices is the sum of gross value added by all resident producers in the economy plus any product taxes and minus any subsidies not included in the value of the products. It is calculated without making deductions for depreciation of fabricated assets or for depletion and degradation of natural resources. Data are in current U.S. dollars. Dollar figures for GDP are converted from domestic currencies using single year official exchange rates. For a few countries where the official exchange rate does not reflect the rate effectively applied to actual foreign exchange transactions, an alternative conversion factor is used.

| A2. | The 2012 law is more wide-ranging with regards to the types of illicit activity that fall under the law (now "any harmful act") and the types of business that are now subject to it (now includes notaries, real estate firms, sports agents, consultants, factoring companies etc.). Furthermore, the maximum value of fines that can be levied under the law has increased from BRL200,000 (approx. USD50,000) to BRL20m (approx. USD5m). The other significant change is the law concerns the reporting of suspicious activities and transactions to regulators – the new law now specifies that such reporting must be to the Conselho de Controle de Atividades Financeiras ("COAF") and that the submission of such reports must not be discussed with anyone (not just the entity referred to in the report).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |

| A11. | The law states that, where the client is legal entity (as opposed to a private individual), it is necessary to identify the beneficial owners and other individuals or entities that are authorised to represent that entity. The same identification and verification requirements, as set out in response to Q9, apply to all such individuals/entities.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
